

EDWARD LANSING SATTERLEE

1890-1894

EDWARD LANSING SATTERLEE was of a distinguished New York family, being one of seven brothers and cousins who have been students at St. Paul's School. He was born at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., on December 11th, 1877, and received his preliminary education in the Westchester School. At St. Paul's he was a good student, an honorable and manly boy, interested in all the games and sports of the period.

From St. Paul's School he went to Columbia, graduating from the School of Architecture in 1899. He entered the Plattsburg Training Camp in August 1917 and, after three months' training there, entered the Army and sailed for France in January 1918, as Captain in the Signal Corps. He was assigned to the Aviation Production Center at Ro-moventin, where he served until September 1918. He was then assigned Liaison Officer to the French General Daudant, 13 Region Française. Here he served with distinction and was much beloved by the French General, as by all his associates and the French people with whom he came into close contact. Unfortunately typhoid fever and a prolonged illness cut short his career on December 4th, 1918.

It was not Captain Satterlee's privilege, owing to his age, to be in the combat forces of the Army, but he did the duties allotted to him faithfully and efficiently, sparing neither strength nor health in his endeavor to do his part toward securing the best possible conditions in the area back of the fighting lines. There is a romance in service of this kind—a man of forty-one years of age, an architect, leaving his practice in New York City to serve his flag and giving his life for his Country.
